

Amanda Arrington

Amanda Arrington is the director of the national Pets for Life program at The Humane Society of the United States and previously served as the North Carolina State Director for The HSUS, lobbying for humane state legislation. With an interest in social justice and desire for equity, in her current role Amanda leads initiatives that increase access to critical pet wellness care services and information for people and pets living in underserved communities.

Amanda is also the founder and Executive Director of Beyond Fences, an organization based in Durham, NC that has worked for 10 years to provide free spay/neuter, fences, pet supplies, and medical care to people and their pets.